Foam rolling..... What is it? & Why should I do it?

Foam rolling is another form of stretching/self-massage. It can be a brilliant addition to a good warm up & stretching routine and can also aid recovery post workout.

A lot of us take up new sports or hobbies as new year's resolutions and if the type of training/exercise you are doing is new to you, you'll be familiar with that next day muscle soreness!

Foam rolling is a great way to:

- Flush out toxins and eliminate lactic acid
- Stretch out tight muscles as a result of training
- Decrease recovery time which can reduce the risks of injury
- Increase flexibility and range of movement
- Increase circulation and blood flow

Foam rolling can be applied to most muscle groups and areas of the body, here are a few examples:

Quadriceps:

Hamstrings:

Back:

Pectorals:

Foam rolling can be uncomfortable and does take a bit of getting use to. Relate this to if you have had deep tissue or sports massage; it might not feel great at the time but feels like you're walking on air the next day!

As a bonus, whilst you are foam rolling to loosen off tight muscles you will also get a bit of a core work out from holding yourself in some of the positions...
WINNER!
